Research Interests

I enjoy mixed methods projects, having conducted both statistical analyses and ethnographic fieldwork. My current research examines the paradox of 'invisible disability,' focusing on identity, stigma management, and the everyday experiences of people who have acquired non-apparent impairment as adults. I am committed to community-based research and do consulting work for local organizations, primarily focusing on disparities within the criminal justice system. More broadly, I am interested in processes of social and institutional marginalization, liminal identities, and perceptions of citizenship.
